Introduction

West Africa and indeed Nigeria has been inundated with series of conflicts. The situation in the region particularly in Nigeria shows that there are much more insecurity than ever, with increasingly concern on growing social tension and conflicts given rise to more displaced persons. These conflicts have also led to destruction of properties and infrastructure. The phenomenon of terrorism, banditry, cattle rustling, militancy, herders and farmers conflict as well as political, religion and ethnic intolerance have exacerbated conflict in Nigeria. Efforts by stakeholders in Nigeria have been more flaccid towards conflict prevention and management. Many violent conflicts would have been averted if there is proper understanding of how to manage issues before they degenerate into crisis as being experienced in the country. Hence, the need for communities in Nigeria to have experts, that will help in preventing and managing incidences of conflict disorder.

In view of the above, the Institute for Peace and Conflict Resolution (IPCR), a government agency, tasked with the responsibility for strengthening Nigeria's and indeed Africa's capacity for the promotion of peace, conflict prevention, management and resolution has established a National Peace Academy (NPA), a training unit to train people in peace promotion and conflict management. The establishment Act of the Institute for Peace and Conflict Resolution; Act 34, 2007, mandates the Institute to “initiate, encourage, organize, arrange and conduct policy-relevant courses, national or international seminars, symposia, conferences and workshops, training programmes and other activities that are incidental to peacemaking and peacebuilding as part of its intensive efforts in capacity building”.

The academy has designed a training course on Advanced Conflict Management Course (ACMC) for members of the public interested in enhancing their capacity in conflict management and peacebuilding. The course is also focuses on enhancing capacities of peacebuilding stakeholders to effectively respond to the current and emerging challenges in peace and conflict management in Nigeria.
